

Thanks for showing interest in what I feel is a long forgotten Hunter Safety issue. The benefits of using a g-tool are:

Safety – keeps your fingers away from the knife

Safety – total control of the cut

Almost impossible to rupture or cut any internal organ – protects the meat

Works with any sharp knife

No gut hook to clog with hair

Less chance of cutting through your gut gloves – protects your clothing

Using a sharp knife carefully cut a two inch slit in the hide where the stomach and breastbone meet. The cut can be in either direction. Cut with care so as not to cut any of the internal organs. Grasp the HHT g-tool in the non-knife hand. Still facing the rear of the deer, insert the g-tool into the slot. With a firm grip, pull the deer hide tight to the g-tool. Holding your sharp knife in the other hand, insert the knife into the g-tool slot with the sharp blade facing up and out. See picture.

Carefully move both hands together toward the rear of the deer. With practice, this can be accomplished in one fluid motion with a slight up and down knife motion. Others may prefer short cuts with the knife while constantly moving the g-tool forward. Cut the belly hide all the way to the anus. In the case of a buck, remove the penis in accordance with your State's field dressing laws.
